Bumrepago — a play in Liraasa 1.0 (revised edition)

Oct 16, 2026 · @Nicolas Peter Bularides

About this edition

Beneath the play now sits one question: what can be sold, what can only be given, and what can only be let go? The bakery changes hands by sale, the bread by gift, the song by being heard, and the father, it turns out, by letting his daughter leave. Liraasa 1.0 has a separate word or operator for each of those acts, so the play can finally argue about them in its own language.

The story, the three voices and the shape of the night are unchanged. 165 of the 231 turns are word for word the original play; 66 are new or rewritten, including the 18 lines the plain 1.0 edition already changed. Each turn below gives the Liraasa with the English beneath it; ◆ marks a line that differs from the original.

Four ideas carry the subtext, and each is built into the grammar:

1. Owning is three things. lanvetovo (owned by law), tovo (held) and nimu (belonging, home). Kipo becomes the legal owner; the bakery stays Aviya's home. Her question Maivo dagi lisrola ki? ("Am I allowed to stay?") turns on the 1.0 permission modal, and Kipo's answer separates the law from the home.
2. Giving is three things, then four. juba (gift), donu (handing-over) and dapadonu (sale). Kipo, who counts everything, names three; Aviya adds a fourth he never counted, tivromomvi (letting go). That is what the father gave.
3. Love as permission, not cause. 1.0's vaku / lesvu / tekvu (make / let / prevent) let Dorin say the play's revelation exactly: father did not make Aviya leave; he let her, and he prevented the telling.
4. The invisible cause. In Movement I, Kipo jokes that no one sees the yeast work: Nuna-nela vimova li vordu; toda-nela sapusia li yordo ("No one sees the cause; everyone eats the effect"). At the climax Aviya answers it: Pilo ka li kelesamni ("Father is the yeast"). The play also runs on three ways of knowing, marked by evidentials: Dorin knew by sight (yehu), Kipo by report (buyu), and Aviya, at last, by inference (tosu).

And one refusal of regret: Aviya says Maivo po noma suvi relnura ("I should have come back"), and Kipo answers that what would have happened is bumrena, no-bread, his Movement I joke turned into the play's quietest argument: counterfactuals do not rise.

Movement I — Ordinary Life

[A village bakery, three hours before dawn. One lamp. A long wooden table white with flour, a bowl of dough, an oven glowing at the back. Rain on the window. DORIN, sleeves rolled, kneads with slow, steady hands. KIPO sits on the table, eating yesterday's bread.]

KIPO: Dorin. Dorin. Li bumre ne keleka.

Dorin. Dorin. The bread isn't climbing.

DORIN: Ito futu keleka.

It will climb.

KIPO: Taivo senosia eli-coda rada nullo.

You say this every night.

DORIN: Ata rada nullo, ito keleka.

And every night, it climbs.

[KIPO leans over the bowl and addresses the dough.]

KIPO: Bumreti, keleka! Fisa! Dorin larnela!

Little bread, climb! Please! Dorin is angry!

DORIN: Maivo ne larnela.

I'm not angry.

KIPO: Taivo ne milobema. Ola ka una coda.

You're not smiling. That's one thing.

DORIN: Palvipa li manlibumre en li farudomlu. ◆

Put the dough in the oven.

KIPO: Ki-coda manlibumre? Eli-coda ka bumrena. Eli-coda ka li sulnona de li bumre. ◆

What dough? This is no-bread. This is the impatience of bread.

DORIN: Kipo.

Kipo.

KIPO: Zabo, zabo. Maivo nolenia ito. Ito ka solosan, ito ne milobema, ito ne keleka. Maivo nolenia ito Dorinti.

Yes, yes. I'm naming it. It's stony, it doesn't smile, it doesn't climb. I name it Little Dorin.

DORIN: Ne nolenia li bumre.

Don't name the bread.

KIPO: Dorinti, ne larnela. Ki-kasa taivo ne keleka? Li kelesamni ka intra taivo. Maivo po palvipa ito la dorvasan! ◆

Little Dorin, don't be angry. Why don't you climb? The yeast is inside you. I put it there on purpose!

DORIN: Li kelesamni ne milobema. Ito talita. ◆

Yeast doesn't smile. It works.

KIPO: Ata nuna-nela vimova li tali de ito. Nuna-nela vimova li vordu; toda-nela sapusia li yordo. ◆

And no one sees its work. No one sees the cause; everyone eats the effect.

DORIN: Ola ka baba bumre de pensa. Palvipa ito en li farudomlu. ◆

That's a bread made of thinking. Put it in the oven.

[In the doorway, unnoticed, AVIYA: coat soaked, a small travel bag. She watches them for a moment.]

AVIYA: Li lumibiti de pilo loki lumila. ◆

Father's lamp still shines.

[Both men turn. A pause. KIPO jumps down from the table.]

KIPO: Aviya! Taivo relnura! Ata taivo ke ruli renlisan!

Aviya! You've come back! And you're very rainy!

AVIYA: Li renli po kavbika maivo transa toda li vila, la molusan, la nimusan, ata po palvipa maivo eli-pago.

The rain carried me through the whole village, gently, homely, and placed me here.

DORIN: Taivo ke renlisan. Semnesia ligo li faru.

You're rainy. Sit near the fire.

AVIYA: Yeko, Dorin.

Hello, Dorin.

DORIN: Yeko.

Hello.

[They do not embrace. KIPO looks from one to the other.]

KIPO: Yava lomola! Ne? Kepi? Eliri famliri ka solosan.

Let's embrace! No? No? These siblings are stony.

AVIYA: Dorin ne lomola. Dorin bumreba.

Dorin doesn't embrace. Dorin bakes.

DORIN: Maivo bumreba kasa li merno venreva.

I bake because the morning is coming.

KIPO: Ata li merno ne sulnosia vobi lomori. Aviya, taivo po sapusia ki? Miyo bumre de deyaapo. Ito ka solosan, nara ito ka bumre.

And the morning doesn't wait for embraces. Aviya, have you eaten? There's bread from yesterday. It's stony, but it's bread.

[He hands her a heel of bread. She bites. Chews. Chews.]

AVIYA: Ito ka ruli solosan.

It's very stony.

KIPO: Ito ka Dorin de bumre.

It's Dorin's bread.

DORIN: Ito ka taivo de bumre, Kipo. Taivo po bumreba ito.

It's your bread, Kipo. You baked it.

KIPO: Zabo. Ne senosia ala li vila.

Yes. Don't tell the village.

DORIN: Li vila futu venreva kube li merno lombila. Toda li vila. Kasa ola ka li apok.

The village will come when the morning begins. The whole village. Because this is the end.

KIPO: Ata Velina futu masuma vobi li bumre de yomla, ata Velina futu senosia fime ito ka menu megesan tamo pilo de bumre. Velina senosia eli-coda rada merno yasmo, sige maivo po ke linuti. ◆

And Velina will ask for the honey bread, and Velina will say that it's less sweet than father's bread. Velina says it every morning, as we all know, since I was a little child.

AVIYA: Velina loki bioba ki?

Velina is still living?

KIPO: Velina ka kasi solosan tamo li bumre de deyaapo.

Velina is stonier than yesterday's bread.

[AVIYA sets down her bag and walks slowly along the table, touching things.]

AVIYA: Toda-coda loki ke eli-pago, sabri pilo. Li tabu. Li buvokovari. Li faru raho po sumasia maivo de manliri kube maivo po ke linuti, ata maivo po somusia su li bumre. ◆

Everything is still here, except father. The table. The cups. The fire that warmed my hands when I was little, and I slept on the bread.

KIPO: Aviya senosia la lirasan! Li faru ka faruasa! Li tabu ka tabuasa! Li bumre de deyaapo ka bumreasa!

Aviya speaks lyrically! The fire is the ascended fire! The table is the ascended table! Yesterday's bread is ascended bread!

AVIYA: Ne pelipa ko maivo de senori.

Don't play with my words.

KIPO: Maivo pelipa ko toda-coda. Ata ki-krono li bumre ka bumreasasan? Kube Dorin milobema. Tonsi: nuna-krono! ◆

I play with everything. And when is bread divinely bready? When Dorin smiles. Therefore: never!

DORIN: Li farudomlu ka nolsasan. ◆

The oven is new.

AVIYA: Ki-coda?

What?

KIPO: Li lotero farudomlu po balbuba. Maivo po talvata baba bumre ala ito. Ito po talvata baba bumre ala maivo. ◆

The other oven broke. I threw a bread at it. It threw a bread at me.

DORIN: Ito po ne talvata. Kipo po ralnora. Kipo po vaku ito balbuba, la dorvanasan. ◆

It didn't throw. Kipo fell. Kipo broke it, by accident.

KIPO: Ne la dorvanasan! Ito po zeldoza. ◆

Not by accident! It resisted.

[AVIYA laughs despite herself, then covers her mouth as if the laugh surprised her.]

AVIYA: Maivo po nimuvorbania vobi eli reso. En li cilni, nuna-nela resora la verasan.

I was homesick for this laughter. In the city, no one laughs truthfully.

DORIN: En li cilni, taivo po lirala.

In the city, you sang.

AVIYA: Zabo.

Yes.

DORIN: Ata?

And?

AVIYA: Ata li cilni ka lasona. Muya lirari. Poka leniyori.

And the city is noise. Many songs. Few listeners.

KIPO: Ata eli-pago, Dorin po milobema una krono. Maivo buyu sabesia ito. ◆

And here, Dorin smiled once. I know it by report.

AVIYA: Taivo ne yehu vimova ito ki?

You didn't see it with your own eyes?

KIPO: Nuna-nela yehu vimova ito. Ito ka baba noru de li vila.

No one saw it with their own eyes. It's a dream of the village.

DORIN: Maivo milobema.

I smile.

KIPO: Ki-krono?

When?

DORIN: Kube li bumre keleka.

When the bread climbs.

KIPO: Tonsi li bumre ne keleka! ◆

Therefore the bread doesn't climb!

AVIYA: En li cilni, li lumibitiri ne narvonia. Li nullo ka gase lumisan gase li merno, ata li nelari valmiva, valmiva, valmiva, ata nuna-nela vilneva li veluri. ◆

In the city, the lamps don't darken. The night is as bright as the morning, and the people walk, walk, walk, and no one looks at the stars.

DORIN: Ata li bumre?

And the bread?

AVIYA: Li bumre en li cilni ka vanisan. Ata ito ne ka bumre.

The bread in the city is beautiful. And it isn't bread.

KIPO: Bumrena!

No-bread!

AVIYA: Bumrena.

No-bread.

[KIPO slides closer to AVIYA, conspiratorial.]

KIPO: Taivo de lirari ka ruli benasan. Maivo buyu sabesia ito.

Your songs are very good. I know it by report.

AVIYA: Buyu? Ki-nela po senosia ala taivo?

By report? Who told you?

KIPO: Somi-nela.

Someone.

[KIPO glances, very briefly, at DORIN.]

KIPO: Baba vaye.

A wind.

DORIN: Kipo.

Kipo.

[KIPO raises both floury hands: innocent.]

AVIYA: Ata krotiapo eli nullo, Kipo? Krotiapo li merno? Ki-pago taivo futu talita?

And after this night, Kipo? After the morning? Where will you work?

KIPO: Eli-pago. Maivo futu talita vobi li nolsasan nela de li bumrepago.

Here. I will work for the new person of the bakery.

AVIYA: Ki-nela ka saivo?

Who are they?

KIPO: Saivo? Saivo ka ruli silisan. Saivo ne resora. Saivo ne pelipa. Saivo sabesia doli cono, cono, cono. Maivo follufa saivo seye.

Them? They're very cold. They don't laugh. They don't play. They know only coins, coins, coins. I fear them, certainly.

AVIYA: Ata saivo futu lesvu taivo resora ki? ◆

And will they let you laugh?

KIPO: Ito ka mufranasan. ◆

It's unlikely.

[DORIN stops kneading for one beat. Then continues.]

DORIN: Li manlibumre keleka. Kipo, li farudomlu. ◆

The dough is rising. Kipo, the oven.

KIPO: Zabo, zabo.

Yes, yes.

[KIPO goes to the oven. AVIYA turns to DORIN. The lamp hums.]

AVIYA: Dorin. Ki-kasa taivo po donuda li bumrepago?

Dorin. Why did you hand over the bakery?

Movement II — Fracture

DORIN: Maivo po donuda ito. Ola-coda ka toda-coda.

I handed it over. That is everything.

AVIYA: Taivo po donuda li famadonu de pilo. Vobi nuna-coda? ◆

You handed over father's inheritance. For nothing?

DORIN: Ne vobi nuna-coda.

Not for nothing.

AVIYA: Taivo po jubaja ito ala baba loteronela. ◆

You gave it as a gift to a stranger.

DORIN: Maivo po ne senosia "jubaja". Maivo po senosia "donuda".

I didn't say "gave as a gift". I said "handed over".

AVIYA: Ola ka una coda!

That's one thing!

KIPO: Ola ka dossa coda. Maivo po cunuca.

That's two things. I counted.

AVIYA: Ne pelipa, Kipo.

Don't play, Kipo.

KIPO: Maivo ne pelipa. Maivo cunuca. Ola ka talita. Baba juba ne tovota dapa. Baba dapadonu tovota dapa. Ata baba donu? Donu ne senosia. ◆

I'm not playing. I'm counting. That's work. A gift has no price. A sale has a price. And a handing-over? A handing-over doesn't say.

AVIYA: Ata taivo, Dorin? Taivo po dapadonuda ito ki? ◆

And you, Dorin? Did you sell it?

DORIN: Maivo po donuda ito. ◆

I handed it over.

AVIYA: Ola ne ka relsi. ◆

That's not an answer.

DORIN: Li bumrepago po guraga muya cono. Pilo po ne povi talita. Ata maivo po ne povi— ◆

The bakery owed many coins. Father couldn't work. And I couldn't—

AVIYA: Pilo de lore ka eli-pago! Eli-pago ka pilo de bumre, pilo de lumibiti, pilo de— ◆

Father's heart is this place! This place is father's bread, father's lamp, father's—

DORIN: Pilo po muduma tressa montari. Taivo po ne ke eli-pago. ◆

Father was sick three months. You were not here.

[Silence. KIPO closes the oven door very quietly.]

AVIYA: Maivo po letola rada deyafama.

I wrote every week.

DORIN: Letori. Letori ne bumreba. Letori ne melvama pilo sidu sapusia.

Letters. Letters don't bake. Letters don't help father eat.

AVIYA: Ata taivo po letola ala maivo ki? Una leto? Una?

And did you write to me? One letter? One?

DORIN: Maivo po talita.

I worked.

AVIYA: Taivo sahi talita. Taivo talita kopisa taivo ne senosia.

You always work. You work so that you don't speak.

DORIN: Ata taivo lirala kopisa taivo ne lisrola.

And you sing so that you don't stay.

[That lands. Nobody moves.]

KIPO: Ata maivo sapusia kopisa maivo ne—

And I eat so that I don't—

AVIYA: Kipo!

Kipo!

DORIN: Kipo!

Kipo!

KIPO: …sapusia la lasosan.

…eat quietly.

[KIPO takes a large bite of bread, very quietly. AVIYA turns back to DORIN, her voice climbing.]

AVIYA: Taivo po donuda li nimu de maivori, ata taivo po ne masuma maivo. Maivo ka taivo de famli, Dorin. Maivo loki ka taivo de famli ki?

You handed over our home, and you didn't ask me. I am your sibling, Dorin. Am I still your sibling?

DORIN: Taivo po livnala li cilni. Maivo po livnala li bumre. Eli-krono maivo livnala reve, ata taivo larnela ki?

You chose the city. I chose the bread. Now I choose again, and you're angry?

AVIYA: Maivo po livnala lira. Ola ne ka gilbu.

I chose song. That is not guilt.

DORIN: Maivo po ne senosia "gilbu".

I didn't say "guilt".

AVIYA: Taivo senosia ito ko toda taivo de vilneri. Rada montafama. Rada leto raho taivo po ne letola.

You say it with all your eyes. Every year. Every letter that you didn't write.

DORIN: Taivo vurlova fime maivo senosia: "Benasan, Aviya! Pagopa, lirala! Maivo futu talita vobi dossa!" zoke ki? ◆

You want me to say: "Good, Aviya! Go, sing! I will work for two!" — sure, that's what you want?

AVIYA: Maivo po vurlova fime taivo senosia ala maivo. Doli ola-coda. Somi-coda. Maivo larnela kasa taivo po helviha ito!

I wanted you to speak to me. Only that. Something. I'm angry because you hid it!

DORIN: Maivo po ne helviha. Maivo po silrosia.

I didn't hide it. I kept a secret.

KIPO: Ola ka una coda.

That's one thing.

DORIN: Ne ka una coda!

It's not one thing!

KIPO: Ola ka una coda kube taivo senosia ito, ata dossa coda kube Aviya senosia ito. Maivo cunuca toda-krono.

It's one thing when you say it, and two things when Aviya says it. I count always.

AVIYA: Li bumrepago hozi, taivo po donuda ito. Pilo hozi, taivo po senosia nuna-coda. Ata eli-krono: ki-nela po dapatovoda li famadonu de pilo? Senosia li nole. ◆

The bakery: you handed it over. Father: you said nothing. And now: who bought father's inheritance? Say the name.

[DORIN does not answer. He looks at KIPO. AVIYA follows his look. KIPO swallows his bread.]

KIPO: Maivo.

Me.

[A long silence. Rain.]

AVIYA: Taivo.

You.

KIPO: Maivo ka li nolsasan nela. Li silisan. Raho ne resora. Raho sabesia doli cono.

I am the new person. The cold one. Who doesn't laugh. Who knows only coins.

AVIYA: Taivo po pelipa ko maivo. Taivo po vilneva maivo, ata taivo po senosia—

You played with me. You looked at me, and you said—

KIPO: Maivo po verava. Doli la resosan. Maivo po dapatovoda li bumrepago ko toda maivo de cono, ata kube maivo po conodonuca, maivo po tavki loya saivo. Maivo bisu sabesia ito. ◆

I spoke truth. Only laughingly. I bought the bakery with all my coins, and when I paid, I almost became them. I know it; I felt it.

AVIYA: Ata taivo, Dorin. Taivo po sabesia. Taivo po vurlova fime maivo ne sabesia.

And you, Dorin. You knew. You wanted me not to know.

DORIN: Kipo po masuma. Ata maivo po follufa.

Kipo asked. And I was afraid.

AVIYA: Ki-coda taivo po follufa?

What were you afraid of?

DORIN: Taivo.

You.

KIPO: Ola ne ka toda li vera.

That is not the whole truth.

DORIN: Kipo.

Kipo.

KIPO: Taivo po silrosia vobi taivo sela, Dorin. Ne vobi maivo. Taivo po ne vurlova fime Aviya masuma: "Ata taivo? Ki-pago taivo futu pagopa?"

You kept the secret for yourself, Dorin. Not for me. You didn't want Aviya to ask: "And you? Where will you go?"

AVIYA: Ki-coda? Dorin. Ki-pago taivo futu pagopa?

What? Dorin. Where will you go?

DORIN: Eli ne ka li krono.

This is not the time.

KIPO: Eli ka li krono. Eli nullo ka li doli krono.

This is the time. This night is the only time.

DORIN: Ne senosia ala maivo ki-coda ka li krono! Taivo po masuma li silro. Taivo! Ata eli-krono taivo palvipa ito su maivo.

Don't tell me what the time is! You asked for the secret. You! And now you put it on me.

[DORIN turns his back on both of them and kneads, hard. AVIYA looks from one man to the other. AVIYA rounds on KIPO, quiet now, which is worse.]

AVIYA: Taivo po sapusia ko maivori. Taivo po somusia en eli-pago kube li ruhe po ruhera. Pilo po jubaja li bumre de rada merno ala taivo. Ata eli-krono taivo ka li lanvetovoyo. Taivo kapoki li taliyo. Eli-krono taivo ka li pilo ki? ◆

You ate with us. You slept in this place when the storm stormed. Father gave you the bread of every morning as a gift. And now you are the legal owner. You used to be the worker. Now you are the father?

DORIN: Aviya.

Aviya.

KIPO: Ne, Dorin. Maivo senosia eli-krono. Maivo po talita eli-pago pendi unzira-dossa montafamari. Maivo ne ka famli. Maivo ka doli Kipo. Maivo po donuda toda maivo de cono. Toda. Maivo ne kavbika ito, Aviya. Maivo lisrola ko ito. ◆

No, Dorin. I speak now. I worked in this place exactly twelve years. I'm not family. I'm only Kipo. I handed over all my coins. All. I'm not carrying it off, Aviya. I'm staying with it.

AVIYA: Taivo ne ka famli. Zabo. Taivo ne ka—

You're not family. Yes. You're not—

KIPO: Ne famli. Nara famatilma ne ka doli barni. Pilo po nolenia maivo "linu". Una krono. Taivo po ne ke eli-pago. Maivo loki ramura ito. ◆

Not family. But kinship is not only blood. Father named me "child". One time. You were not here. I still remember it.

[AVIYA steps back as if struck. A long beat. When she speaks again, it is quietly, to KIPO.]

AVIYA: Taivo ka li lanvetovoyo, Kipo. Nara eli-pago ka maivo de nimu. Maivo dagi lisrola ki? ◆

You're the legal owner, Kipo. But this place is my home. Am I allowed to stay?

[KIPO cannot answer. He turns away to the oven. His hands are shaking; he busies them. AVIYA turns to the empty room.]

AVIYA: Pilo po ne lenila maivo de lirari. Pilo po senosia fime lira ka lasona, ata bumre ka nami. Pilo po ne vurlova fime maivo pagopa. Ata eli-krono pilo de bumrepago ka taivo de bumrepago, ata maivo ka baba loteronela en maivo de nimu. ◆

Father didn't listen to my songs. Father said that song is noise, and bread is food. Father didn't want me to go. And now father's bakery is your bakery, and I am a stranger in my home.

DORIN: Pilo po lenila taivo.

Father heard you.

AVIYA: Kepi.

No.

DORIN: Pilo po lenila taivo.

Father heard you.

Movement III — Resonance

[DORIN wipes his hands. For the first time, he stops working entirely.]

DORIN: Li nilvu kroti li mudu. Pilo po senosia: "Maivo vurlova sidu lenila Aviya." Maivo po kavbika pilo ala li cilni. Tressa lornuri. Pilo po semnesia vofa li lumibitiri, en li sado. Taivo po hiro lirala. Pilo po fesmo ne timruta. ◆

The winter before the illness. Father said: "I want to hear Aviya." I carried father to the city. Three hours. Father sat far from the lamps, in the shadow. You began to sing. Father tried not to weep, and could not.

AVIYA: Kepi.

No.

[Silence.]

AVIYA: Ki-coda maivo po lirala?

What did I sing?

DORIN: Maivo ne sabesia li nole. Baba lira de nilvu. Pilo po senosia fime li lira ka gase sumasan gase li faru.

I don't know the name. A song of winter. Father said that the song was as warm as the fire.

AVIYA: Pilo po senosia ola-coda ki?

Father said that?

DORIN: Pilo po senosia doli ola-coda. Pilo po ne senosia muya senori. Krotiapo, pilo po senosia: "Ne senosia ala saivo. Si saivo sabesia, saivo futu relnura vobi maivo. Saivo suvi lirala."

Father said only that. Father didn't say many words. Afterward, father said: "Don't tell her. If she knows, she will come back for me. She should sing."

AVIYA: Si maivo po noma sabesia, maivo po viki relnura. ◆

If I had known, I would have come back.

DORIN: Zabo. Tonsi pilo po tekvu maivo senosia ala taivo. ◆

Yes. Therefore father prevented me from telling you.

AVIYA: Pilo po ne vaku maivo pagopa. ◆

Father didn't make me leave.

DORIN: Kepi. Pilo po lesvu taivo pagopa. ◆

No. Father let you leave.

AVIYA: Ata maivo po pensapa fime saivo po ne lenila. ◆

And I thought he didn't listen.

KIPO: Tivromomvi ka li mosa solosan juba. Ito ne milobema. Ito talita gase li kelesamni. ◆

Letting go is the stoniest gift. It doesn't smile. It works like yeast.

[AVIYA looks at KIPO.]

AVIYA: Baba vaye.

A wind.

KIPO: Baba vaye. Yade.

A wind. Sorry.

AVIYA: Pilo po semnesia en li sado. Ata maivo po lirala ala li lumiri, ala li nelari, ala nuna-nela. Ata pilo po ke ola-pago. Ola-pago. Ola-pago. ◆

Father sat in the shadow. And I sang to the lights, to the people, to no one. And father was there. There. There.

AVIYA: Maivo po noma suvi relnura. ◆

I should have come back.

DORIN: Kepi. Taivo po suvi lirala. Pilo po senosia ola. ◆

No. You were meant to sing. Father said so.

KIPO: Li codari raho po noma venreva, ka bumrena. Itori ne keleka. ◆

The things that would have happened are no-bread. They don't rise.

[She sits on the floor. DORIN, after a moment, brings the bowl of dough and sets it in front of her. He kneels beside her.]

DORIN: Manlima.

Use your hands.

AVIYA: Maivo ne sabesia ola-modo.

I don't know that way.

DORIN: Taivo de manliri sabesia. Ne la vanisan. La sumasan.

Your hands know. Not beautifully. Warmly.

[He places his hands over hers in the dough. They knead together. KIPO watches from the oven, then quietly joins, a third pair of hands at the bowl. The rhythm of the kneading becomes the rhythm of the speech. What follows is spoken, not sung, but each line falls on the push of the dough.]

DORIN: Una.

One.

KIPO: Dossa.

Two.

AVIYA: Tressa.

Three.

DORIN: Miru.

Water.

KIPO: Bumre.

Bread.

AVIYA: Manliri.

Hands.

DORIN: Palvipa. Manlima. Sulnosia.

Place. Use your hands. Wait.

KIPO: Sulnosia, sulnosia. Li bumre ne milobema.

Wait, wait. The bread isn't smiling.

AVIYA: Li bumre sulnosia la sumasan. Pilo po sulnosia la sumasan.

The bread waits warmly. Father waited warmly.

DORIN: Pilo po sulnosia en li sado.

Father waited in the shadow.

KIPO: Pilo po sulnosia ligo li faru.

Father waited near the fire.

AVIYA: Pilo po sulnosia, ata maivo po lirala vofa, vofa, vofa—

Father waited, and I sang far, far, far—

DORIN: Ata maivo po bumreba.

And I baked.

KIPO: Ata maivo po resora.

And I laughed.

AVIYA: Ata nuna-nela po senosia.

And no one spoke.

KIPO: Una. Maivo po sulnosia vobi baba famli.

One. I waited for a family.

DORIN: Dossa. Maivo po sulnosia vobi li farvi.

Two. I waited for freedom.

AVIYA: Tressa. Maivo po sulnosia vobi baba leniyo.

Three. I waited for a listener.

DORIN: Ata li leniyo po semnesia en li sado.

And the listener sat in the shadow.

KIPO: Ata li famli po semnesia ligo li faru.

And the family sat near the fire.

AVIYA: Ata li farvi po sulnosia ultra li dorbi.

And the freedom waited beyond the door.

DORIN: Una.

One.

KIPO: Dossa.

Two.

AVIYA: Tressa. Ata nuna-nela po senosia, ata toda-nela po sabesia.

Three. And no one spoke, and everyone knew.

DORIN: Maivo po yehu sabesia. ◆

I knew: I saw.

KIPO: Maivo po buyu sabesia.

I knew by report.

AVIYA: Maivo po ne sabesia. Eli-krono maivo tosu sabesia. ◆

I didn't know. Now I know by what it left behind.

KIPO: Tressa sabe, una pilo. ◆

Three knowings, one father.

DORIN: Taivo po lirala. Pilo po lenila. Ola ka una coda.

You sang. Father heard. That's one thing.

KIPO: Ola ka una coda.

That's one thing.

AVIYA: Ola ka una coda.

That's one thing.

[The dough rises under their hands. KIPO lets go first and points.]

KIPO: Finra! Li bumre keleka! ◆

At last! The bread is climbing!

DORIN: Li bumre keleka.

The bread is climbing.

[And DORIN smiles. KIPO sees it.]

KIPO: Dorin milobema hoyo! Maivo yehu vimova ito! Ola ka bumreasasan! ◆

Dorin is smiling, who knew! I see it with my own eyes! That is divinely bready!

AVIYA: Bumre. Bumreasa. Ne li bumre de li veluri. Li bumre de pilo de manliri. Pilo ka li kelesamni. ◆

Bread. Ascended bread. Not the bread of the stars. The bread of father's hands. Father is the yeast.

[The rhythm breaks. They sit back from the bowl. Ordinary speech returns.]

DORIN: Li manlibumre suvi semnesia. Ne tressa lornuri. Una lornu. ◆

The dough should sit. Not three hours. One hour.

KIPO: Li bumre ka gase somusan gase Dorin.

The bread is as sleepy as Dorin.

[AVIYA almost laughs.]

AVIYA: Kipo. Eli-pago ka taivo de bumrepago.

Kipo. This place is your bakery.

KIPO: Zabo. Nara ne maivo de nimu. Ne bodu. ◆

Yes. But not my home. Not yet.

AVIYA: Ata taivo futu ka silisan ki?

And will you be cold?

KIPO: Poye. Si nuna-nela resora ko maivo.

Perhaps. If no one laughs with me.

[A beat. KIPO busies himself with the lamp.]

KIPO: Li bumrepago nedunia baba lirayo. Rada merno. Kube li dorbi lallela. Maivo ne povi donuda muya cono. Maivo povi donuda li bumre de rada merno.

The bakery needs a singer. Every morning. When the door opens. I can't hand over many coins. I can hand over the bread of every morning.

AVIYA: Taivo masuma maivo sidu lisrola ki?

You ask me to stay?

KIPO: Maivo masuma. Taivo dagi lisrola, Aviya. Ne kasa maivo ka li lanvetovoyo. Kasa eli-pago ka taivo de nimu. Maivo ne sabesia ki-oro taivo futu lisrola. ◆

I ask. You may stay, Aviya. Not because I am the legal owner. Because this place is your home. I don't know whether you will stay.

[AVIYA turns to DORIN. He has taken his coat from a hook.]

AVIYA: Dorin?

Dorin?

DORIN: Maivo futu pagopa.

I will go.

AVIYA: Ki-pago?

Where?

DORIN: Maivo ne sabesia. Ola ka li farvi.

I don't know. That is the freedom.

AVIYA: Taivo futu pagopa la kendenasan ki? ◆

You'll go without an aim?

DORIN: Zabo. La dorvasan. ◆

Yes. On purpose.

AVIYA: Taivo po donuda li bumrepago vobi li cono. Ata vobi li farvi.

You handed over the bakery for the coins. And for the freedom.

DORIN: Zabo. Korsi li bumrepago, maivo tovota li nulu. ◆

Yes. Instead of the bakery, I have the road.

AVIYA: Taivo po ne senosia ola-coda.

You didn't say that.

DORIN: Taivo po ne masuma.

You didn't ask.

AVIYA: Dorin. Taivo po kavbika pilo ala li cilni. Tressa lornuri. Ata tressa lornuri reve. Narli, taivo po lisrola. ◆

Dorin. You carried father to the city. Three hours. And three hours again. And still, you stayed.

DORIN: Maivo po lisrola kasa li musva. Ata kasa li amor poye. ◆

I stayed out of duty. And out of love, perhaps.

AVIYA: Lorejuba.

Thank you.

DORIN: Ne jubaja. Donuda.

Not giving a gift. Handing over.

[A beat. AVIYA laughs, wet-eyed.]

AVIYA: Ola ka una coda.

That's one thing.

DORIN: Ola ka dossa coda.

That's two things.

KIPO: Maivo po cunuca. Juba, donu, dapadonu: tressa coda. ◆

I counted. Gift, handing-over, sale: three things.

AVIYA: Ata tivromomvi. ◆

And letting go.

[KIPO stops. He looks at his fingers as if he had counted wrong for twelve years.]

KIPO: Ola ka cuara coda hoyo. Maivo po ne cunuca ola. ◆

That's four things. I never counted that one.

[Silence. The rain has stopped. Grey light at the window. Off: a knock at the street door. The first customer.]

KIPO: Li merno.

The morning.

[KIPO takes the key from his apron, looks at it, and holds it out to AVIYA.]

KIPO: Una merno. Doli una.

One morning. Only one.

[AVIYA takes the key. She looks at DORIN.]

AVIYA: Dorin. Taivo futu relnura ki?

Dorin. Will you come back?

DORIN: Poye.

Perhaps.

AVIYA: Maivo futu lisrola ki?

Will I stay?

DORIN: Poye.

Perhaps.

KIPO: Ola ka nosvosan. ◆

That is possible.

[A second knock. AVIYA walks to the door, key in hand. She stops with her palm flat against the wood. Behind her, DORIN buttons his coat; KIPO lifts the first loaf from the oven. She does not open the door yet.]

AVIYA: Li bumre ka sumasan.

The bread is warm.

KIPO: Li bumre ka sumasan.

The bread is warm.

DORIN: Lombila.

Begin.

[AVIYA turns the key. Blackout before the door opens.]

How the grammar carries the meaning

Every new line uses a 1.0 feature for a dramatic reason, not as a demonstration. The table follows the play's order.

Feature	Line	What it does in the scene
vordu / yordo (cause / effect)	Nuna-nela vimova li vordu; toda-nela sapusia li yordo.	Kipo's yeast joke plants the play's theme: love works unseen and is known by its effects.
dorva (intention)	la dorvasan (I put the yeast in on purpose); la dorvanasan (Kipo broke the oven by accident); Zabo. La dorvasan. (Dorin leaves aimless, on purpose)	The same root moves from comedy to Dorin's deepest choice: to be deliberately without a goal.
zeldo (resistance)	Ito po zeldoza. ("It resisted.")	Kipo's comic self-defence against the accident charge.
sabri (except)	Toda-coda loki ke eli-pago, sabri pilo.	Aviya's first full line in the house names the absence that drives the play.
yasmo (as we all know)	Velina senosia eli-coda rada merno yasmo.	Deadpan village comedy.

Feature	Line	What it does in the scene
lesvu + mufra	Ata saivo futu lesvu taivo resora ki? | Ito ka mufranasan.	Plants "let" one movement before it becomes the revelation; Kipo predicts his own coldness.
juba / donu / dapadonu	Baba juba ne tovota dapa… Donu ne senosia.	Kipo's philosophy of transfer: a gift has no price, a sale has one, and a handing-over hides which it was.
dapadonuda vs donuda	Taivo po dapadonuda ito ki? | Maivo po donuda ito. | Ola ne ka relsi.	With "sell" in the language, Dorin's evasion becomes audible, and Aviya names it.
famadonu (inheritance)	li famadonu de pilo	What was sold is not a shop but an inheritance.
zoke (irony)	…Maivo futu talita vobi dossa!" zoke ki?	Dorin's sarcasm, which the 0.7 play could only fake through quotation.
hozi (topic)	Li bumrepago hozi, … Pilo hozi, …	Aviya lines up two accusations: the bakery, then father.
tavki (almost) + bisu (felt)	…maivo po tavki loya saivo. Maivo bisu sabesia ito.	Kipo almost became the cold owner at the moment he paid, and knows it from inside.
lanvetovo / nimu	Taivo ka li lanvetovoyo, Kipo. Nara eli-pago ka maivo de nimu.	Law versus belonging, in one sentence.
famatilma (kinship)	Ne famli. Nara famatilma ne ka doli barni.	Kipo's claim to the family, made without claiming to be blood.
dagi (may, be allowed)	Maivo dagi lisrola ki? … Taivo dagi lisrola, Aviya.	The ownership reversal as a question, and Kipo's answer a movement later: permission granted because of home, not law.

Feature	Line	What it does in the scene
hiro + fesmo	Taivo po hiro lirala. Pilo po fesmo ne timruta.	"You began to sing. Father tried not to weep, and could not." Two operators carry the play's most private image.
noma (counterfactual)	Si maivo po noma sabesia, maivo po viki relnura. / Maivo po noma suvi relnura.	Aviya's regret, unmistakably contrary to fact.
tonsi + tekvu	Zabo. Tonsi pilo po tekvu maivo senosia ala taivo.	Dorin turns her regret into the father's reasoning: because she would have come back, he prevented the telling.
vaku vs lesvu	Pilo po ne vaku maivo pagopa. / Kepi. Pilo po lesvu taivo pagopa.	The revelation: love as permission, not cause.
tivromomvi (letting go)	Tivromomvi ka li mosa solosan juba… Ito talita gase li kelesamni.	Kipo names the gift and ties it back to the yeast.
noma in a relative clause	Li codari raho po noma venreva, ka bumrena.	Kipo's answer to regret: what would have happened is no-bread; it doesn't rise.
yehu / buyu / tosu (seen / reported / inferred)	Maivo po yehu sabesia. / Maivo po buyu sabesia. / Elikrono maivo tosu sabesia. / Tressa sabe, una pilo.	The three ways of knowing one father; Aviya's is inference, from what his love left behind.
finra + hoyo	Finra! Li bumre keleka! / Dorin milobema hoyo!	Kipo's running gag pays off: the smile no one saw, he finally sees (yehu), and it surprises him (hoyo).
Climax metaphor	Pilo ka li kelesamni.	"Father is the yeast" answers Movement I's joke about the unseen cause.

Feature	Line	What it does in the scene
ki-oro (whether)	Maivo ne sabesia ki-oro taivo futu lisrola.	Kipo leaves the choice open, which is itself an act of letting go.
kende + dorva	Taivo futu pagopa la kendenasan ki? | Zabo. La dorvasan.	Dorin's freedom as a paradox: aimless, on purpose.
korsi (instead)	Korsi li bumrepago, maivo tovota li nulu.	What Dorin received in exchange: the road.
narli + musva	Narli, taivo po lisrola. | Maivo po lisrola kasa li musva. Ata kasa li amor poye.	Dorin admits duty plainly and love only with poye (perhaps), true to his voice.
Kipo's count, hoyo	Juba, donu, dapadonu: tressa coda. | Ata tivromomvi. | Ola ka cuara coda hoyo.	The motif "one thing, two things" ends on a fourth thing Kipo never counted.
nosvo (possibility)	Ola ka nosvosan.	Two "perhaps" answers, then Kipo's quiet hope, before the door opens.

Kept on purpose: the reveal Maivo. / Taivo., the kneading recitative, Manlima ("use your hands"), Dorin's Ne jubaja. Donuda., and the ending Lombila. They work because they are short; the new grammar is spent around them, not on them.

Validation

Every spoken line passes the Liraasa 1.0 validator: no unknown or retired words, and correct clause order. The checks cover particle order, one evidential per clause, attitude and status words at clause end, and the forbidden operator pairs. The 66 new or changed lines were also back-translated mechanically from the lexicon alone, and each reading matches its English.

	Original (0.7)	Revised 1.0 edition
Spoken turns	207	231

	Original (0.7)	Revised 1.0 edition
Liraasa words	1,635	1,947
Syllables per word	2.22	2.23
New 1.0 grammar words used	0	18 kinds, 26 uses
New 1.0 roots used	0	8 (cause, effect, intention, possibility, likelihood, duty, resistance, goal), plus the new compounds famatilma (kinship) and tivromomvi (letting go)

The play grows by about 19% in words, almost all of it in Movement III, where the revelation now has room to land. Word length is unchanged, so the gain is in meaning, not in longer words. Aviya's "there" speech is back to 27 syllables, using lumiri and nelari ("to the lights, to the people").

Not tested: how it plays aloud. The new philosophical lines (Kipo's yeast and "no-bread" lines, "three knowings, one father") are the first places to trim if a read-through runs long.